Forget nose jobs
and face-lifts,
the hottest place
to have cosmetic surgery is, erm, down there...

Lisa, 27, is flicking through a magazine. She's saved up £3,000 to have cosmetic surgery, and is deciding exactly what look she's going to plump for. But she's not looking at beautiful bodies and faces in a fashion magazine; she's looking at full-frontal shots of vaginas in Playboy.

Lisa had overheard her boyfriend telling his friends he had to 'do the Mr Whippy' when they had sex. She didn't know what that meant, but thinking he was probably bragging

under the knife

about his bedroom antics she persuaded him to tell her.

It turned out that by 'doing the Mr Whippy' he meant that he had to rotate his hips in circles during sex, because if he simply moved straight in and out, he couldn't feel himself inside her. Her vagina was larger and looser than other girls he'd had sex with and just to make it extra clear, he also told her that she was 'a bit of a bucket'.

'Obviously I dumped him after that. I didn't see how the relationship could work and I really didn't want to have sex with someone who thought I was a "bucket",' says Lisa. 'But what he said about my vagina stayed with me.'

Like many of us, Lisa had dreamt of being slimmer and having cellulite-free thighs, but she'd never imagined there might be something wrong with her vagina. She'd always assumed it was fine. Once she knew she was looser than other girls, everything else she'd always thought was wrong with her body seemed insignificant. She decided to dump any ideas she'd harboured of having liposuction one day and get her vagina tightened instead.

For Regina, having something as drastic as cosmetic surgery on her vagina seemed like the only solution

Regina Black, 31, is a nurse. She had Laser Vaginal Rejuvenation a year ago.

Before I had surgery, I felt as though my vagina was much older than I was and I hated it. I was so much looser down there than I'd been before I had my two kids. I couldn't even feel my boyfriend's penis when we had sex and he would make comments about it. That made me feel like crying and I didn't know what to do.

I felt really self-conscious and began to avoid having sex. This started to take its toll on our relationship and I was incredibly frustrated – it wasn't as though I didn't want to have sex, I just felt

I had to do something about my vagina first. I wanted to be tight again so I could satisfy myself as well as my boyfriend.

He and I never really talked about it properly until I was watching TV one night and Dr Matlock came on. I called my boyfriend to come in and watch the programme with me. Up until then, it had been a big problem in our relationship, but once he saw the programme he was really supportive and I went to see Dr Matlock soon after. He told me about Laser Vaginal Rejuvenation and said it was a simple procedure that tightened the vagina. He said he could make me young again. I was so relieved that I could get help, I booked myself in ▶
